Based on the assumptions that over 90% of all mine drainage and associated processing waste waters are reused, a company may be disposing of over 500 million litres of water a day. These and similar applications require a wider range of water treatment options than conventional drinking water treatment systems. The advantages of Watershed and Flood Protection technology are: Minimization of the usage of raw materials, chemicals, electrical power and space. Enhanced water reclamation and removal of pollutants Enhanced water reuse Reduction in the need for water treatment chemicals and energy (compared to conventional systems) Advantages for the Environment: Minimization of surface and groundwater pollution. Minimization of the discharge of pollutants into receiving streams, lakes and oceans. Low environmental impact due to improved treatment of wastewater. Cleaner air quality. Cleaner water quality. Minimization of the consumption of non-renewable energy (i.e. produced by fossils) and therefore an improved sustainability of our environment. Minimization of the consumption of non-renewable resources (i.e. produced by the mining industry) therefore improving the sustainability of our environment and economy. Minimization of the need for raw materials (i.e. produced by mining industries) therefore improving the sustainability of our economy and environment. Large quantities of waste water that are difficult to manage in the conventional
