Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of manufacturing a nanometer scale particle and a nanometer scale particle. 2. Description of the Related Art A self-assembled core-shell particle having a magnetic material as the core and a shell composed of a polymer having low solubility is a nanometer scale particle having a diameter of about 10 nm to 100 nm. The core-shell particle is a magnetic particle having a large specific gravity of 1.4 to 3.0, and its properties are expected to be more excellent than those of a magnetic powder. In view of this, a self-assembled core-shell particle is expected to be useful as an agent for various uses, for example, as an agent for magnetic recording or as a biosemiotic catalyst. There have been several proposals for the manufacture of self-assembled core-shell particles. In one method proposed in US20000208582A1, a (11-bromohexadecane)C60 molecule is used as a core material for a core-shell particle, the (11-bromohexadecane)C60 molecule is dissolved in an organic solvent, an aqueous solution composed of metal salt is added to the organic solvent containing the core material, and the organic solvent is evaporated. In another method proposed in JP-A-2004-066355, a (hexadecane)C60 molecule is used as a core material, the (hexadecane)C60 molecule is dissolved in an organic solvent, an aqueous solution composed of metal salt is added to the organic solvent containing the core material, and the organic solvent is evaporated. In still another method proposed in JP-A-10-307618, a polymer precursor obtained by reacting a polymer having low solub
