Add items from the context menu Before you can benefit from what the application has to offer you need to make sure that.NET Framework is installed on your computer, because it's a required component for functionality. Chances are it's already on your computer, since modern Windows iterations come with it as a default feature. Once launched, the configuration window shows up, but it's also the place from which to open configured files and folders. Unfortunately, adding new items can't be done by simply dropping them over the main window, so you need to use the dedicated browse dialogs for either files, or folders. On the other hand, the application integrates itself in the context menu, making it even easier to add specific items to the list of favorite locations. In addition, the context menu can be used to also launch items, which means the application doesn't have to be added to the system Startup folder to run with Windows. Straightforward file, and folder launcher Sadly, the application works only with offline locations, meaning there's no support for web pages to be launched via your web browser. However, creating a specific shortcut, or link to a web page can lead to a workaround. There's no possibility to organize favorite items in custom groups. Moreover, folders you add don't extend content, but rather bring up File Explorer to continue navigation from there. As such, adding too many items can lead to a pretty crowded context menu group. To sum it up Taking everything into consideration, we can say that ConFavor allows you to create a slick quick launch menu for your files and folders with cool integration directly in the context menu. Items can also be added this way, and even though the set of features is pretty shallow, it's a fast way to create quick access points to important files and folders. It is web based. You can use your existing internet connection and less technical background to install it. ASP.NET MVC is a free technology created by Microsoft and is Microsoft's MVC (Model View Controller) framework that is built on top of the.NET platform, and is optimized for building dynamic websites and web applications with rich user interfaces. The MVC architecture divides the code into three layers: Controller - Provides action and business logic. When the HTTP requests are received by the web server, these instructions are executed by the Controller. The Controller is generally the module that contains the most complex logic of an MVC application. It may also comprise logic that is frequently used by multiple controllers. Model - Contains business object definitions. The model layer is where the data (in the case of the Web, the data is contained within the domain) is stored. The domain layer implements this data model. View - The View is the module that defines the user interface for the particular application. In a typical web application, a lot of work is done within this module. It may contain HTML (or ASP) pages, CSS, JavaScript and AJAX components. ASP.NET MVC architecture decouples the developers from database and business objects. It separates the logic of the application in different layers that each one can be used independently. This architecture isolates the view layer from the controller logic. With ASP.NET MVC, we can build more flexible and maintainable web applications than other.NET based websites as we need to write less
