According to the owner of Bitcoin Cash, Roger Ver, the next generation of distributed technologies will allow people to "light a billion candles on their birthday cake." A few weeks ago, Roger Ver came back from the Las Vegas Summit, known as the Mecca of crypto, where the market was humming. He gave an interview to Cheddar, an American multi-media channel, where he once again confirmed that Bitcoin Cash is going to be the universal currency. He also mentioned a new blockchain called Servi. Roger Ver, an American crypto-enthusiast, is the co-founder of Bitcoin.com – the largest Bitcoin media portal in the world. He also created Bitcoin.com's sister company, Bitcoin.com Network, which is responsible for the management of 28 cryptocurrency exchanges around the world. Roger Ver believes that Bitcoin has not changed since its creation, and its market cap is not determined by its actual value, but by momentum. According to him, Bitcoin cannot compete with other cryptocurrencies like Ethereum, Ripple, IOTA, and others when it comes to market capitalization. He thinks, however, that Bitcoin Cash has a future. "We have Bitcoin Cash. Unfortunately, Roger Ver thinks Bitcoin is not ready for primetime, and that coins like IOTA, Ethereum, Ripple or others are ready for it. However, the recent decline in the market cap of Bitcoin Cash is not a good sign for this crypto currency. "Roger Ver explained. When asked about the future of cryptocurrencies, Roger Ver said that the upcoming year will be a "year of volume." He believes that the first applications that will find a wide audience are the ones that people are using every day – food, clothing, and cars. "I am optimistic about the whole space, and I believe that Servi is going to be successful," said Roger Ver, while he added: "I don't think you can do
