Mikhail Gorbachev donned a fake mustache and was photographed by posing as the Soviet leader on the infamous cover of National Enquirer's "Above-Ground Nuclear Munitions" edition in May 1988. Also featured on the cover is former President Ronald Reagan, former Austrian chancellor Bruno Kreisky, and Soviet premier Mikhail Gorbachev. Gorbachev, according to a June 6 New York Times report, made the cover as an apparent rebuttal of an article in the Enquirer that labeled Reagan, who had recently embraced Gorbachev's attempts to ease tensions between the US and the USSR, as "Moscow's Man in Washington." The false cover included a photograph of Reagan next to former British prime minister Margaret Thatcher, and next to a smiling Gorbachev and an "anti-nuclear missiles" symbol. The Los Angeles Times said it knew what Gorbachev was "mocking" the Enquirer's cover. Jim McGrath, editor of the Enquirer, said Gorbachev wanted to mock Reagan's political enemies. Gorbachev, who grew up in the Soviet city of Gorky, created the Bonfire of the Vanities exhibit in 1987 as a "major gesture toward reform" of his nation. The Enquirer said at the time that the display demonstrated Gorbachev's commitment to furthering his country's defense policies as well as to "clear the air" with the US. The Enquirer cited a 1988 statement by the institute's director, Michael Kammen, who said that the exhibit was designed to be "a bombshell." The article noted that a simple search of "the institute's Web site turns up more than 300 essays, articles, [and] cartoons" that argue in favor of eliminating nuclear weapons. Developing an examination program: high school students with learning disabilities. This study examined the effectiveness of an examination program for students with learning disabilities. It looked at the effects of diagnostic, programmatic, and curricular intervention and their interrelationships. We used 2 years of pretest and posttest longitudinal data on two groups of students with learning disabilities to show significant improvements in basic skills after intervention. For students in the experimental group, there was a highly significant improvement in skills in reading comprehension, basic skill assessment, and essay writing. The results are discussed in terms of the importance of clearly specified programmatic goals, diagnostic focus, and curricular intervention.
