----- URL Encode Function: URL is a string in a standard URL format (or protocol, blank space, etc). The URL address might be input in a rich-form text box, a search form or in a table cell. Once the user has entered the URL address, he can easily encode the address using the encoded string button. The user can also use the HEX code to encode the address manually.

URL Encode Features: -----

----- - URL address in plain text format can be directly encoded. - User can type in his own URL address, and he has the option of manually selecting the HEX code. - URL address in HEX format can be selected. - The URL address can be encoded on the fly. - When inputting the address, the whole address is automatically encoded, even if the user pastes several addresses into the text box. - Separate encoded strings will be created for each input. - Once the user has encoded the URL address, he can copy it in rich-form text box, search form or into another location on the page. - The edited address will be encoded on the fly. - Blank spaces will be removed. URLEnDecode was created with the assumption that if you need to encode a URL address you are probably going to want to create one at some point and it would make sense for you to have a tool to do so at your fingertips. URLEnDecode and Usage: ----- First of all, download and open URLEnDecode.exe. After the downloaded package is opened, the GUI of the application will be displayed. Click on the URL encode button in order to encode the address.

Q: Selecting half of factors with mutate I have a dataframe with a factor column that has a large number of factors (more than 20,000). I'd like to combine all of the factors that are equal to each other and then select the values of the two other factors in that group. See the example below.

Featured in: - Google Play-Pages Tuesday, August 1, 2009 Fitting In For those of you who are not familiar with how I work, I'm going to show you pictures of the situation I found myself in. This is what happened two weeks ago at work. It was a Friday, I had done my morning ritual of having a nice, long, hot shower and a light breakfast. I had filled my cup with delicious chocolate milk and had my cart with all the things I needed to get done for my day. I sat down at my desk to eat a small piece of my breakfast and noticed that my entire workstation was crammed with 9 people. Each person had their own personal space and was their own little tribe. One person had their phone, one had a can of Coke, one had their lunch, one had his/her computer, one had a binder, one had their coffee cup, and the last one had their paperwork. Being the friendly employee, I put my scone down and took a seat across the cubicle from their little tribal group. Everyone had their phones out and were on email or updating facebook. No one was talking to each other.

Ionising radiation and gene mutation.

There is a lot of evidence that ionising radiation (IR) can cause DNA mutations. It has been established that mutations induced by IR are mutagenic in mammalian cells. Irradiated cells of higher eukaryotes have so far not been found to initiate tumours in experimental animals. Genomic studies of the target tissues in patients irradiated for medical purposes indicate that IR can induce mutation in humans. The yield of mutations depends on the LET. Unrepaired DNA damage arising from an IR dose appears to be the main mutagenic hazard of IR. We know that mutation induction by IR depends on the topology of DNA and the spectrum of DNA damage. Here, we review recent work on DNA repair and mutation induction by IR, and the experimental data on the effect of
