I've had a number of e-mails about getting hold of copies of this book, so here's a link to where you can order a copy. Have a browse through the questions, and then leave your answers on your blog post which will be published on a day of your choosing in January 2015. 1. You mention a number of people in this book. Would you have liked to have included anyone in particular? Steve: Apart from myself the book mentions the people I interviewed for the book, above all my wife Sonia and with whom I've discussed many of these issues over the years. But these are the people who helped me give a shape to what I was trying to say, and it might be that they are a bit redundant in a list which began with Thomas Malthus. The book mentions some of the people I've interviewed for my research, but if I had more time it would certainly have been interesting to have included some of the people I've known over the years, such as Lord Kelvin (George Perkins or Lord Kelvin), Bertha von Suttner, William Stanley Miller, Warren Buffett and Prince Charles. 2. You can trace the origins of the Industrial Revolution to the fourth millennium BC. Was it a huge leap of logic for you to imagine that the core of the Industrial Revolution lay in ideas, people and technological discoveries that were only 100-200 years old? Steve: There was no leap of logic, and I've always been pretty comfortable with evolution and change, so I'm not thinking of the ancient history in terms of great leaps and great leaps of thinking, rather in terms of stages, sometimes very gradual and sometimes quite sudden. The book looks at the period of time between the late 18th century
