Friday, 4 May 2017 My son and I had decided to stop working - and he is doing well at this. He is able to leave for the day without needing to be placed in an adult carer. Myself and Mum are just planning to do other things these days. We have no babies to look after any longer, not after 35 years of parenthood and 3 daughters. It's just not necessary. We are still living the same house that I was born in after all these years. We just have a smaller place to live in. With all those years working a lot in the daytime, we have been lucky enough that I no longer need to be away from home at certain times of the day. Now I am getting older, and my husband is older too; we both like to spend more time together, just out and about. On Friday afternoons for example, my daughter comes and helps me look after them. We are together too much to need a nanny. With my stepson, he has helped me a lot since he came home from hospital early last year. Since he is the same age as my son, we have become very good friends, even though he has separated from his wife and baby. Having my husband around is not an option for me, as he is disabled. He can't easily get around after his strokes, so my work schedule has changed to suit him. He had been ill with his hips, and they eventually couldn't cope with his weight. He couldn't even walk from the bathroom to his bedroom - he uses a wheelchair. One day, I woke up to find him lying on the floor clutching his stomach. That night I saw his front wall had fallen down. I moved my husband to a nursing home - the young nurses didn't feel comfortable touching him, so he spent his time alone in a wheelchair in the corridor. I eventually got over to the nursing home and removed his bed and bedding, straight onto the floor - he was so relieved to be able to sleep without pain, on a bed again. Then I decided it was a bit daft for him to be living like this, so I got him down to our house - we are now in the living area of the house. There is only one bedroom, a sitting area and a kitchen. It's not difficult to move him around because of his colithography has been used to manufacture a variety of electronic devices, such emiconductor devices. In the photolithography processes, a photoresist einafter, referred to as "resist" or simply "resist") layer is formed on a substrate ace, a desired pattern is formed in the resist layer, and the resist layer is eloped to form a resist pattern. On a patterned substrate, ion implantation, heat the timent, and other processes are performed to form a semiconductor device. There recently been a dramatic increase in the integration of electronic elements, such memory capacity of a semiconductor device, and a wafer test may be performed semiconductor wafer to obtain an accurate characteristic of the resist pattern. In ifer test, semiconductor wafers are loaded into a test apparatus, and a test is ormed using a probe needle. In this case, a semiconductor wafer having a size of mm diameter or more is held with a suction chuck, and a test apparatus is held robot. The test apparatus includes a test wafer support portion to which the ion chuck to which the test semiconductor wafer is held is attached, and is ble of simultaneous movement of the test semiconductor wafer held with the ion chuck and test apparatus held with the robot. The suction chuck to which the semiconductor wafer is held and the test apparatus held with the robot are ed and integrated in a wafer test. For this, a robot, a linear motor, a wafer oort base, and other mechanisms are used. The test apparatus includes a iconductor wafer vacuum chucking mechanism, and a semiconductor wafer ium chucking is performed, for example, by a pneumatic pressure device (see, for nple, Patent Document 1). The pneumatic pressure device disclosed in Patent ament 1 includes two pumps that take air into vacuum chambers and then harge the air, and a trigger valve that supplies and discharges one of the vacuum nbers. A trigger can be operated by a pointer placed
