When the views are grossly misleading or are simply wrong I cannot stand the endless bombarding of that poor ill-informed little man, George Lucas, whose first thoughts were best expressed in a recent Huffington Post (I have little time for the Huffington Post but I have it handy so I do not want to provide any link, I just want to deal with the issue) interview where he berates Fox for not allowing the prequels to be released on DVD, even though it is against their financial interest. He says: “Why can’t Fox give us what we’ve paid for? I mean, since you’re obviously out to make money, why not give us what we paid for? We’re paying twice.” Oh dear. He is saying that the Enterprise is not able to be made, so Fox would not want to give the experience of purchasing the film by renting it. But if this was the case why did Fox arrange for the film to be released in cinemas at all? Now maybe his concept of why Fox would not want to make a film that would make it less money than releasing it in cinemas is that he is saying that it would not be a great film, and Fox would rather just sell it to us on DVD, or not make the film at all, and not have to waste all that money. But what he is actually saying in this interview is that we have to sit through a film which is of a lower quality in order to get it at a lower price. Oh dear, that is a gross misrepresentation of what he
