France's new President Emmanuel Macron was installed Sunday following his victory over Marine Le Pen, named in the role amid a far-right wave engulfing the traditionally liberal continent. "It is a new page, we are going to do it together," Macron told France's parliament after a parliamentary election. "We are going to defend our values of liberty, equality and fraternity." Macron's movement, En Marche!, is considered a centrist party, but has no leader since its founder Jean-Luc Mélenchon resigned as party leader in April. Though he came in second with the most votes, Macron's party gained little more than 18 percent of the vote. Fears of a deep right-wing resurgence in Europe were realized in the European parliamentary election, when a new right-wing European Parliamentary bloc took
