."tag in file" doesn't work. I think that my problem is related to "invisible characters". This is a problem for the script. What I need is to show the number of lines written by sed before the NEWFILE. A: You could use a tool like hexdump, which will show you all the characters you're interested in, e.g. hexdump -Cn file to list all hexadecimal chars. After that, you could pipe the output of this tool to a tool that converts the hexadecimal to decimal, like this: hexdump -Cn | tail -n +2 | awk '{printf $1}' | bc bc is a Perl-based decimal calculator (also works in bash). The decimal part of the output will give you the number of lines you're interested in. A: GNU sed supports the -c option to count the number of lines, so: sed -c 1,2p yourfile will print the first 2 lines. Then you can easily count the number of lines: grep -c yourfile If the input file is UTF-8 then the answer will be "decimal characters" EU institutions, businesses, and citizens call on Huawei to release detained journalist Michael Kovrig to secure his release and in order to develop responsible business practices. "We will continue to condemn every step taken by China to infringe upon the basic freedoms and rights of its own citizens and to deny effective access to media and information in China." Over the past months, due to its pervasive trade and economic practices, Huawei has come under heightened scrutiny by the United States and a number of other countries. On July 1, the United States Department of Justice filed a brief to the US District Court for the Southern District of New York, arguing that Huawei is a national security risk and is working with the Chinese government to deploy back doors into its equipment. A number of additional charges were brought against Huawei on Friday. Huawei has taken the United States to court in an effort to defend itself in the matter, arguing that the allegations against it are vague and only amount to an abuse of the legal process. The company stated that it will fight such allegations because it believes it has done nothing wrong, did not enable back doors, and cannot as a matter of conscience. In a statement

During the last few decades, the incidence of surgical site infection (SSI) has been declining, primarily as a result of improvements in the care of the surgical patient. A careful preoperative evaluation of the patient will prevent complications that lead to SSIs. In addition, maintenance of asepsis and skin preparation prior to wound closure will reduce SSIs. Finally, a randomized study of more rigorous perioperative skin preparation resulted in a significant decrease in the incidence of SSIs.Initiating stage/early stage (S0/S1) non-small-cell lung cancer. The incidence of lung cancer has been increasing steadily in recent years and can be attributed to the increase in cigarette smoking in this country. Most lung cancers are histologically diagnosed as adenocarcinomas. At present, no completely effective treatment exists for patients with stage/stage-limited lung cancer. The overall 5-year survival rate of patients with stage IA lung cancer is 97% and is about 90% for stage IB lung cancer. In that respect, the early stage is the most important determinant of successful treatment. In order to increase the survival rate and to decrease the rate of recurrence, aggressive postoperative management is required. Effective drugs are being developed, and a multimodality approach is being established to improve the cure rate. Herein, the treatment of early-stage lung cancer is reviewed.
