1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a traveling device capable of being widely applied to a variety of electronic equipment. 2. Description of the Related Art The related art has been shown in Patent Document 1 (Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 2003-20148). This document describes "a travelling device that is capable of holding a plurality of electric or electronic components thereon and moving the components". In the specification of this patent document, "electric or electronic component" refers to a component which has a geometric shape and is electrically or electronically connected to other components by a conductive wire or the like. For example, a component may be a circuit component, a terminal used for connecting the circuit component to other components, a wire connected to the terminal, or the like. In the case of a circuit component, the circuit may be an internal circuit, a power source wiring, or the like. The travelling device described in this document comprises a case and a plurality of pairs of advancing/returning sections. The advancing/returning sections are movably arranged within the case. Each of the pairs of advancing/returning sections holds one of the electric or electronic components thereon and is configured such that one of the advancing/returning sections advances/returns toward and away from the other advancing/returning section in unison with the other advancing/returning section. For example, each of the advancing/returning sections is a cylinder. In such a configuration, a pair of cylinders each containing one of the components may be disposed within the case, with each of the cylinders being slidably engaged with the other cylinder. Each of the advancing/returning sections is held by the case. Therefore, when the case is attached to the housing of an electronic equipment, the electric or electronic component may be attached to the advancing/returning sections of the travelling device via the case. Thereafter, when the case is taken out from the housing, the electric or electronic component may be taken out from the case via the advancing/returning sections. As a result, when the electric or electronic component is brought into contact with the housing, the contact between the housing and the electric or electronic component is prevented from being broken and/or from being damaged because the electric or electronic component is attached to the case, rather than to the housing. However, the travelling device of the Patent Document 1 may possibly collide with the components that are present on a surface of the housing of

in that we haven't had the thick-framed lenses. The lens exchange is a brilliant bonus for the M lenses as there is now a nice range of useful close-focussed primes available, all the way up to the 35mm f/1.8 equivalent of the 28 f/1.4 prime. I think the extended coverage and use of the 15mm optic on the M8 is a very good choice. The weight of the camera means that the 14mm is a fairly stable focal length, but the M8 may be a little too heavy to take up to the heights with a 15mm. A bonus is the improved viewfinder, which is more than just there for show. It's a big improvement on the extremely compact one on the M9, and it gives a much more direct view of what the lens is focussing at. Vignetting Vignetting is still an issue for the M lenses, with the 15mm lens producing greater levels of it than some others. You really need to be right in the middle of the frame to avoid this. Cropping of corners is fairly good, although I prefer to crop off the upper left corner to remove reflections from the front element in certain shots. I also like to crop in from the sides to create a more vertical composition (the camera crops top/bottom, and leaves the sides in tact). The quality of the images is decent, with the 18mm showing some softening at the edges. The 28mm is a little more detailed, and the 35mm has a warmer rendition, but all three perform well. Depth of field I love the depth of field. It seems to just get better and better each time I pick up the camera. Depth of field can be good or bad, and is what separates the amateur from the experienced photographer. For example, the long focussed 35mm can get a massive depth of field, which makes it great for landscapes, and allows for high DOF shots without blurring. The 28mm lens however can give us some great shots with DoF, but not as much as the 35mm. Above is a photo of the Taj Mahal taken with the 35mm at f/5.6, which shows the massive amount of DoF. Below is the same shot taken with the 28mm at f/5.6. Depth of field can be a terrible
