KINSHASA, Congo (AP) - Angola's President Jose Eduardo dos Santos said on Sunday it was "hopeless" to talk about peace in the region of the South African port of Richards Bay as long as "Angola is not free and so African problems are not solved." Dos Santos, who had been on his first trip to Congo since the 1991-2002 civil war ended, also said, "Ultimately in the history of Angola, we can't be separated from the existence of the Congo." He was visiting the port, next to the Congo-Brazzaville border, for talks with Congo's outgoing president, Denis Sassou Nguesso, and meet with other African leaders. He spoke during the opening of a summit of the central African Forum for Integrated Agricultural Development, an effort to promote agricultural development in the region of Congo, Angola, Central African Republic and Chad. Angola became independent from Portugal in 1975. Congo gained independence in 1960. They fought a civil war from 1980 to 1991 that killed some 2.5 million people. Dos Santos said his country was the "prominent economic, political and social actor" in the region. He said, "The speeches of some North African and Arabic countries about the dark side of Africa, Angolan peace and African independence, to me are words of hopelessness as long as Angola is not free and so African problems are not solved." As for peace in the Congo, he said the situation was "clear;" that it needs to "at first be a return to a just peace, a just status and a just security." "There has always been talk of peace and
