Hello Manish, I am sorry but I don't have an iPhone device to check on this. However, this FAQ already has the answer to this question. Click here to see it. on a motion to dismiss to compel arbitration in the absence of a definite, unequivocal agreement to arbitrate, the question for the trial court is not whether the contract is governed by the Federal Arbitration Act, but whether the contract in fact provides for arbitration. Goodwin, Inc.* (1980), 69 Ill.App.3d 1, 15 Ill.Dec. 887, 386 N.E.2d 379. The Carolems' complaint sought damages on various claims for breach of warranty, strict liability in tort, fraudulent misrepresentation, deceptive trade practices and negligent misrepresentation. Their petition stated that the Carolems were "willing and ready to bring their claims before [the] AAA." The record contains no further complaint of the Carolems that any provision of the dealership agreement or the Federal Arbitration Act was violated. The Carolems do not assert fraud, duress or unconscionable contract terms which would render the arbitration agreement unenforceable. Under these circumstances, we hold that the trial court abused its discretion in denying Daniel's motion to compel arbitration. The order denying Daniel's motion to compel arbitration is reversed, and the cause is remanded with directions to the trial court to enter an order compelling arbitration. In the ink-jet printing field, it is known to provide a printhead that has two or more drop generators that are offset from each other along a printhead face. In an effort to improve image resolution, it is desirable to provide a finer resolution between the drops of ink. Thus, as the number of drop generators increase, so does the desired resolution between the drops. For example, four drop generators (i.e., no drop offset from the other) will produce only one print pixel, but four adjacent drop generators would produce two pixels. The number of drop generators may be determined by the surface area that an ink droplet can coat. It is well known that an ink drop can be coated by a set of surface area depending on the size of the drop. Consequently, an adequate number of drop generators can be made to precisely coat a size of droplet. A set of drop generators can be used to coat multiple sized droplets, such as with a set of drop generators that coat 4 mm, 6 mm, and 8 mm sized drops of ink. This type of arrangement can be used with a low number of drop generators (4 or 6) when fine resolution is not desired. However, when a larger resolution (e.g., 32 dots per inch) is needed, then the larger number of drop generators is needed. Each drop generator of the set could print a 64 dot rectangle (4×32), but two adjacent drop generators would print two of the same 64 dots. Thus, the printing resolution is doubled with the larger number of drop generators. Many manufacturing challenges arise when having a large number of drop generators. In one arrangement, the drop generators are manufactured using a
