Maintain precise aircraft measurements of distance. does not deserve the stature of an acknowledged national treasure. This cannot be allowed. Harper could have spoken with more caution, but he was acting on behalf of his country. It appears to me that there is another criterion for the cabinet, but I'll wait for my next session to see how that will play out. We're about to hear from Lawrence MacAulay, who introduced the motion to the senate and will therefore give an example of what is and is not acceptable. It's not your sole right to be in the cabinet. Many people would like to be in the position, but the PM is the one that makes the calls. As I said, if you're not in the cabinet, then just be quiet about it. Stephen Harper's motion of non-confidence in the House of Commons is no big deal. It's not a matter of right or wrong. It is his prerogative to make such a motion, and it is only in his power to determine the outcome. In his motion, he has basically asked the Senate to consider the motion passed by the House of Commons. If the Senate then passes a motion of non-confidence in the PM, then there would be no government. In the latter case, who would be called upon to form a new government? Probably no one, because it is usual for the PM to be the first to step aside if there is a vote of no confidence. It's a somewhat messy scenario, and probably should be avoided, but it's not an insurmountable obstacle. Why can't we have free elections? It's a reasonable question because it is inevitable
