“HyperMotion Technology is a technological step-change in the history of FIFA,” said Albert Roca, senior game designer at FIFA developer EA Canada. “It allows us to make the game world feel more responsive and tactile in a game that is increasingly often played across multiple screens.” The new engine produces millions of polygons at 60 frames-per-second, which makes the game appear more realistic. Additionally, it enables the team to make some changes to the way the ball moves and the way players control it in the air. This results in improved variety of options for the flow of the game, including over-hit dribbles and the ability to perform powerful headers on the ball. “With the introduction of this new engine and technology, FIFA is poised to be the best-looking, most authentic football game on the market,” said Andrew Lasker, senior vice president of EA SPORTS. “The team is thrilled with the new technology and gameplay results and continues to be inspired and focused on making the best football game on the market.” The new game engine will be available with the FIFA Ultimate Team on Xbox One and PC beginning this spring, with an iOS release to follow.

Q: Proving that an infinite set with no last element is not a union of two disjoint infinite sets I have the following question: Let S be an infinite set without a last element. Let U and V be two disjoint infinite subsets of S . Prove that S is not equal to $U \cup V$. I think I have figured out a proof. So, I would prove that $S \setminus \text{cup } S \subseteq (U \setminus \text{cup } V)$. If U and V were the same, this would be trivial since $S \setminus \text{cup } S = \{x \in S \mid x \notin S\} \setminus \text{cup } \{x \in S \mid x \notin S\} = S \setminus \text{cup } \emptyset = S$. However, since U and V are disjoint, $U \cap V = \emptyset$. Then, I would prove that $S \setminus \text{cup } S \subseteq (U \cap V)$. Since $U \cap V = \emptyset$, $S \setminus \text{cup } S$ is the same as S . Hence, S is contained in the singleton $S \setminus \text{cup } S$.

The one in the first posting has worked well for me for 3 or 4 years, but the bearings are so poorly designed that they have to be replenished every couple of years. On the other hand, the one in the second posting is a wooden model, with a wire core, perhaps not terribly attractive, but probably more economical and permanent than the first. It is the first one. The fiddle-spinner is a spunel gear with cogs, and then a drive ring rotating the cogs through the drive ring. The drive ring is directly attached to the spindle. The motor is not directly attached to the spindle, but it is spun by the fiddle-spinner through a parallel drive pulley. The motor is attached to the shaft that drives the spindle, the drive pulley being arranged so that its running diameter is smaller than the diameter of the shaft. The spindle is extended out through the lid of the box, and the drive ring has a hole in it that is large enough to accommodate the spindle. The fiddle-spinner wears out a bearing every 3 years, and it has been working well for me for about 4 years now. The bearing is a medium speed, steel cylindrical bearing that has many arms to support the drive ring. It is a ceramic cup-shaped plastic shell, with a metal insert inside the cup. The bearing is inside a plastic shell, as for example in an electric drill, and this bearing does work quite well for me. The bearing is inexpensive enough that I don't hesitate to replace it, and it is a little under half the price of the fiddle-spinner. You need a speed reducer if you want to use a
