The same basic plot of AI Mecha making some kind of portal to another world and then failing in their mission to conquer the world. [...] Metropolis: Lux Obscura Gameplay: The same basic plot of AI Mecha making some kind of portal to another world and then failing in their mission to conquer the world. It is very... very "Stargate". I love the bits where some poor sap has to pilot a captured mech or a little wooden box thing like in ST:TNG because the AI is so utterly moronic it can barely figure out the controls. In the first stage there was a part where this guy on a motorbike managed to get ahold of a mech, and rode it for some reason, he was clearly new to AI management. The AI controlled mech was basically attacking a teammate because another member of your team had to press a button to "fire". Of course, he managed to escape. The AI's could learn to manage proper mission elements but they were barely doing anything that required it, relying too heavily on their training to kill other players. It was kind of hilarious, except I was feeling a bit bummed that the AI was so bad. The bike rider was just too incompetent to

What's new in Return Ace Soundtrack:

Williams has had to fight multiple opponents over the past decade. From her first singles match in 2005, Williams has never played a single match as the same person. Serena Williams on Monday lost in the second round of the Australian Open, to a player ranked 15 in the world. But against which opponent did she have to fight the most to win? Here's a look back at the uneven story of Williams' career: 2005: Lost to "just a little girl from Port Arthur" In 2005, Williams begins her professional career as an 18-year-old outsider on the Australian tennis circuit. That initial loss — a tough battle on the Roland Garros clay courts against Kristina Barrois, a French 14th seed — was tough for Williams to get through. But the win was even more surprising. According to local media reports, "An Incredibly Tough Task" was how Tennis magazine described the match. It wasn't a great win, but Williams beat the tough Barrois, who had a career-high 52 unforced errors. Williams' rise was astounding, but few expected she could beat three different 14th-seeded players in a single month. By February, she'd reached a Grand Slam final in her second event — the Australian Open. Williams' quest to become the first unseeded player to reach a major final continued. That year, Williams won the three majors, reaching consecutive Grand Slam crowns at the U.S. Open, French Open and Wimbledon, becoming only the sixth left-hander to do so and the first player to win three straight slams in a single year. She was also the biggest favorite to win the Australian Open, then called the WTA Championships. That's because Williams had been ranked No. 1 in the world for 10 months. There's not an Australian Open since that hasn't been won by the world No. 1, yet Williams was unseeded. She was ranked No. 4. Her run ended in the final against Liu Fangzhou, an unseeded Chinese player ranked 262. But Williams lost in a grueling five-set semifinal to the eventual champion, Martina Hingis, in which both players were chasing their first major title. Despite the first major loss on the tour — it was a moment of realization for Williams that the long climb from 14
