kids, and we've been practicing them and doing lots of practice sessions with one of the kids and the teacher and the room director. But every time the kids have listened to them they have started crying, and as I did they would start crying, and it would be 10 minutes of crying. When I left I was thinking, we really have to make some good-byes to these kids. But they were so reserved. The kids were in these little groups, and they would huddle around a microphone, and they would talk about the other kids. One of them said, "If I never see you again, I'll never understand the strangeness and the joy of seeing." So I left that night with tears in my eyes. Vivica Billick, The Hollywood Reporter, 15 June 2012 So it's May 2012, and I'm rehearsing this new movie called October Baby. Now, I've never acted in front of a live audience before, so I'm freaking out. You see, the studio that's producing October Baby is a very small, intimate studio -- they only do films that only have six to eight cast members. So my part was, you know, the "Amanda" part. I mean, I love, love, loved playing Amanda. It was my second role, and it was so much fun. We shot this movie in five days, and it turned out beautiful. But my main goal was to be able to act on camera in front of a live audience. I had trained for this day. I had worked in theater. I had done plenty of stage acting, but I'd never done a movie before. So I'm up there, and I'm up against a bunch of experienced actors. So I can tell right off the bat, okay, I've got to be better. I've got to find my way around those tiny acting spaces. But I'm not really nervous. It's not like "oh no, the lights are gone, it's too dark, the cameras are all at the back, I can't see! But then I see people looking at me and that helps me focus on what I want to do. 12. Writing: Narrating and Modulating. the rhetoric in the speech. 13. Dating: What to Say and When to Say It.
