After winning the New Hampshire primary on Tuesday, former South Bend, Indiana Mayor

Pete Buttigieg said he thought he had won the Iowa caucus for a while.

Now, his campaign is admitting they missed several days of votes due to network issues during the transfer period and early vote.

During the April 12 primary, Buttigieg had fallen behind in caucus voters who had moved on to another state.

When the Buttigieg campaign's caucus night results were announced, they claimed he had somehow won the caucus. Unfortunately for them, it turns out they missed several days of vote transfers. Buttigieg also got new caucus results late Tuesday evening, but they still missed the whole process. The New York Times writes: Mr. Butt e79caf774b
