History Tucker was a half-hour, weekly, variety-comedy/rock music series (sans the variety component, for the majority of its run), broadcast live from the CBS Television City studios in Los Angeles. It was presented by actor-comedian Don Rickles, who was also the series's scriptwriter and executive producer. Rickles's partner on the series was frequent guest star Marshall Grant, who performed on-camera vocals on numerous episodes. The premise of the series was that "Professor" Tucker (played by Rickles) was a laid-back "ladies' man" who would be seated behind his trademark jigsaw puzzle desk in a polka-dot suit, top hat, and monocle, and would introduce musical guests with a joke or another, often knowingly convoluted, remark. He would then sign autographs for the audience, after which he would read a script for his next half-hour episode. Following each half-hour, the main guest star would return and participate in a somewhat improvisational "tease show" in which Rickles would tease the guest with any number of "made-up" questions (usually focusing on the guest's sexual or romantic activities). As the audience and the guest became more comfortable with Rickles, he would grow less terse and would frequently make off-the-wall jokes, ad-lib, and throw in more sophisticated puns and quips. Among the guest stars were Pat Boone, Lita Roza, Sammy Davis Jr., Ann-Margret, Ricky Nelson, Perry Como, Patsy Swayze, Barbara McNair and Lee Marvin. The series also featured a young and popular

I am using Ubuntu 12.04 and I am unable to pass the parameter '-r' to hs_err_pid 0 in this line: ./mpg123 -h -v 0.5 -r 0.0 -d /dev/null -k 1 -h sould.mp3 I know the problem is in the parameter, because the parameter works, if I remove the parameter it works. A: You can't use single quotes around the parameters. Try: ./mpg123 -h -v 0.5 -r 0.0 -d /dev/null -k 1 -h sould.mp3 and ./mpg123 -h -v 0.5 -r 0.0 -d /dev/null -k 1 sould.mp3 Modification of hydrogen-containing polymers by incorporation of nitrogen and phosphorus is known to provide polymers having excellent physical and chemical properties. However, the reaction of polyamides with phosphorus and nitrogen compounds generally results in deleterious effects such as objectionable color and poor processability. For example, halides, amides, azides and sulfides of phosphorus and nitrogen are known to be generally incorporated into polyamides at a relatively low temperature (preferably 100.degree.-150.degree. C.). When the incorporation is done at higher temperatures, the polymer will often decompose to a major extent. Furthermore, the high temperature reaction produces large amounts of undesired reaction by-products which cause discoloration of the polyamide. Further, significant amounts of "poisoning" is caused. Poisoning is defined herein as undesirable production of by-products which reacts with the polymer matrix such as isocyanates and isocyanurates to cause discoloration and formation of undesirable chemical cross links. The prior art discloses the use of certain solvents, such as phenylated ketones, tertiary amines and trialkylphosphites and esters of such amines, as being advantageous for the introduction of phosphorus-nitrogen compounds to polyamides. Generally, the use of such solvents is limited to conditions of high temperature and pressure and results in undesirable discoloration of the polyamide. In addition, the incorporation of phosphorus and nitrogen compounds by the action of such solvents requires the addition of solid catalysts which are generally inert to such solvents and which are effective in cataly
